

THREE DRINKS TOO MUCH FOR A MAN FROM IDAHO

"Three drinks knocks out a man from dry territory," said W. H. Richards of Idaho when he was arraigned before Judge Reeder this morning on the charge of drunkenness. He was arrested last evening on complaint of a Rio Grande crossing watchman that Richards was staggering around near the railroad tracks. The watchman feared that he would be run over by a train.

When Richards explained to the judge that he was from dry territory and was unable to stand the powerful effects of Ogdene liquor, the judge gave him a suspended sentence. C. Gullickson, also charged with drunkenness, appeared in court in such a condition as to lead the judge to suspect that Gullickson had not entirely recovered from the effects of his celebration. The prisoner was held pending a sobering-up process.

THOS. SHERMAN HERE TO SEARCH OUT HOMESTEADS

The evening Mr. Sherman will accompany Timothy Hoyt of the lands department of this district to Idaho, where a careful inspection of lands in the national forests will be made. From Idaho Mr. Sherman will make a trip through District No. 1.

Mr. Sherman states that it is the desire of the government to place all available agricultural lands at the disposal of the people, with a view to having them settled upon and cultivated.

NEW RANGE IS FOUND FOR SHEEP IN THE FOREST

Owing to the recognized shortage of beef and mutton products throughout the United States, the forest service has been making a special effort during the past few years to develop methods of range management on the national forests which will result in the most complete utilization of the range without injury to the forage and young trees, which might be trampled or killed by too intensive grazing. There are also thousands of acres of timbered range within the national forests which are not now considered as having a grazing value by practical stockmen who are accustomed to using the more open grasslands outside the national forests.

In order to demonstrate the value of the unused ranges in District 4, and further to perfect methods of management which will enable the stockmen to harvest the forage crop on timberlands without injuring the small trees, an experiment was initiated last year on the Payette national forest in southern Idaho. The range selected was a virgin area previously ungrazed, which the members of the forest service considered as one producing forage sufficient to sustain approximately 10,000 head of sheep during the regular summer grazing season. A detailed reconnaissance was made of a sufficient area to support, in the judgment of the forest officers, two bands of sheep of 1500 head each. When this work was completed, a prominent sheepman of southeastern Idaho furnished two herds to be used in the experiment. One of these herds was handled by the sheepman himself, without restriction, the other was placed under the direct supervision of a graduate of the Logan Agricultural college, employed by the forest service, with instructions to perfect so far as possible methods of handling the stock which would require the minimum amount of range to produce maximum results without injury to the range. At the end of the season the average weight of the lambs in the herd under the supervision of the forest service exceeded the average weight of the lambs in the check herd by five pounds.

During the season of 1913 the experiment was continued, and the methods employed by the forest expert were also followed as closely as possible by the other herders. The sheep entered the range on June 20, the average weight being on that date 29 pounds for the lambs and 91 pounds for the ewes in the check band, and 33.3 for the lambs and 98.6 for the ewes in the experimental band handled under the supervision of the forest officers. At the close of the season, September 29, the average weights were 77.9 pounds for the lambs and 107 pounds for the ewes in the check herd, and 77.9 pounds for the lambs and 114 pounds for the ewes in the experimental band grazed under forest service supervision. This is an increase in weight of 38.5 pounds for the lambs and 16 pounds for the ewes in the check band, and 38.5 pounds for the lambs and 15.8 pounds for the ewes in the experimental band.

This increase in weight, which was put on in a period of 90 days, on range previously considered as having no practical value, has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the officers of the forest service, and will also probably prove to the sheepmen that the range can be utilized very profitably for sheep grazing purposes.

Mr. Fenn, in charge of the grazing department in the Ogden office, stated today that the weight of the lambs on September 20 was considerably above the average for the ranges on the national forests in Utah, Nevada, Idaho and western Wyoming.

SUGAR FACTORY HAS MORE BEETS THAN CAN HANDLE

The Ogden factory of the Amalgamated Sugar company is overwhelmed with beets. The farmers have been bringing the beets in to the local plant so rapidly that the laborers at the sheds have been unable to care for them.

The crop in the Ogden district is estimated as high as 100,000 tons for which the farmers will receive close to half a million dollars.

The beets this season are not as rich in saccharine by two per cent as they were last year. The average will not be much over 14 per cent. The farmers are getting tonnage, but the factory is losing in sugar contents.

REGISTRATION VERY LIGHT THROUGHOUT THE CITY

While a number of automobiles have been in the field during the day to look after voters who have not registered, but very few registrations were made during the forenoon and it is said by the candidates that the heaviest registration of the day will be after 5 o'clock, as nearly all assignments of rigs have been made for a time later than that hour.

Headquarters for Mayor Fell and candidates for the four-year term commission, Chris Flygare and A. E. Weatherly, were occupied by some one most of the day, yet there was but little activity, and it is stated by other candidates that they have had little to do. The candidates all claim that the rigs and autos that are in the field to get people to the registration places are furnished gratuitously by friends.

Those eligible can register up to 7 o'clock this evening.
